Protocol Overview

Every person needs various minerals for health, providing through the diet as well as supplementation. An inadequate diet can lead to mineral deficiency, or at least to insufficient minerals. Some of the more common deficiencies are iron deficiency, iodine deficiency, and calcium deficiency. Minerals are essential nutrients for every living cell in the human body. Defined in the study of human nutrition as all the inorganic elements or molecules required for life, minerals assist in body functions such as producing energy, growing, and healing. Minerals are required for fluid balance, blood and bone development, maintaining a healthy nervous system, and regulating muscles, including heart muscles. Minerals, like vitamins, function as coenzymes. They participate in all enzyme reactions in the body and help in the assimilation and use of vitamins and other nutrients.

This wellness protocol combines trace minerals and macro minerals together to enhance overall health and well-being. It is important to not only attempt to get your nutrients through your food, but also to be aware that our food is no longer as nutritious as it has been, therefore, one needs further supplementation. This protocol provides that supplementation and works best along with a diet rich in raw fruits and vegetables.
